

ASSET FOR SHARE TRANSACTIONS – BEWARE OF SELLING YOUR SHARES WITHIN 18 MONTHS ESPECIALLY IN THE CONTEXT OF A SHARE BUY-BACK

By Ryan Killoran, Director

LEGAL BRIEF MAY 2016

To prevent tax considerations from discouraging the incorporation of a business, a specific form of 'rollover relief' is available when an asset is exchanged under an 'asset-for-share transaction'. The relief is set out in section 42 of the Income Tax Act 58 of 1962 ("the Act") which applies automatically unless the parties elect for the relief not to apply.

INTRODUCTION

The basic principle underlying an 'asset-for-share transaction' is relatively simple: A natural person or legal persona may dispose of, to a resident company, in exchange for equity shares, capital assets the market value of which is equal to or exceeds their base cost – or trading assets the market value of which is equal to or exceeds their cost or value as closing stock – without being subject to capital gains tax ("CGT") or income tax on the gain. Instead (with certain exceptions) the capital gain or gross income that would have accrued to the transferor on disposal of the capital assets or trading stock is 'rolled over' and becomes taxable in the hands of the transferee company on disposal.

Further, when a transferor disposes of an allowance asset and the transferee company, in turn, acquires it as such, the corporate 'rollover relief' rules allow for the transferee to 'step into the shoes' of the transferor. The parties are deemed to be one and the same and amounts allowed to the transferor will not be recovered or recouped by him or included in his income in the year of transfer.

ANTI-AVOIDANCE RULES

The provisions of section 42 are subject to a number of specific so-called anti-avoidance rules that prevent the section from being misused by either the person selling the asset or the company issuing the shares.

One particular scenario is where a transferor disposes of the acquired equity shares in a transferee company within 18 months from date of acquisition, where immediately prior to the disposal 50% or more of the market value of the assets originally transferred is attributable to allowance assets, trading stock or both.

This particular anti-avoidance rule is found in section 42(5) of the Act. This section was amended in terms of the 2015 Taxation Laws Amendment Bill ("TLAB") with retrospective effect to 1 April 2015.

Prior to its amendment the rule provided that, if immediately prior to the disposal, more than 50% of the market value of all the assets disposed of to the transferee company was attributable to allowance assets or trading stock or both, the transferor would be deemed to have disposed of the equity shares as trading stock to the extent that any amount received or accrued was less than or equal to the market value of the shares at the beginning of the 18-month period.

In terms of the amendment in the TLAB, the disposal of the shares is no longer treated as a deemed sale of trading stock but is simply included in that person's income.

PURPOSE

The purpose behind the anti-avoidance rule is understandable in that it is aimed at preventing the tax arbitrage achieved by a transferor selling allowance assets and trading stock tax-free in terms of an asset-for-share transaction and shortly thereafter selling the equity shares acquired as a result, as capital assets.

The reason for the change was that the old wording which deemed the sale to be a sale of trading stock created unintended anomalies, which potentially converted the nature of the equity shares to assets held as trading stock. It was stated in the Explanatory Memorandum to the TLAB that the section be amended to clarify that the anti-avoidance provision only seeks to include the amount as gross income. Unfortunately, this was not the outcome as the amount is now automatically included in 'income' and not 'gross income' and while the change appears to be subtle, for the reasons explained below, its effect is potentially onerous.

If one considers the tax treatment of a dividend in the context of a share buy-back transaction, the subtlety and the effect of the amendment become clear. Ordinarily, a dividend is included in gross income but is exempt from normal tax in terms of section 10(1)(k)(i) of the Act. As a result, a share buy-back, which comprises a dividend for tax purposes not only reduces the proceeds amount for CGT purposes but is also exempt from normal tax. However, if the Act deems an amount to be income, the inclusion in income effectively bypasses the exemption provisions in the Act which will have the effect of treating the amount received from a share buy-back as being subject to income tax.

SECTION 42(5)

Under the current provisions of section 42(5), if a person sells allowance assets to a company which meet the 50% threshold and in exchange receives equity shares which qualify for the roll-over treatment under section 42 and within 18 months the company repurchases the shares or some of the shares for an amount that constitutes a dividend for tax purposes, the proceeds received by the selling shareholder will be taxed as income. Whereas under the old rule and for that matter in terms of the intended change as communicated in the Explanatory Memorandum (i.e. to include the amount received in 'gross income'), the amount would be exempt from normal tax.

The effect is even more acute where the shareholder is a company as under the old rule the buy-back dividend would have been exempt from income tax and the 15% Dividend Tax. Now, under the new rule, the amount is included in income and subject to tax at 28%.

The onerous result is further compounded by the fact that the change applies retrospectively to 1 April 2015. Again, this does not appear to align with the intention of the legislature as it was formally stated in the Explanatory Memorandum to the TLAB that the amendments would come into operation on the date of promulgation, which would have been 27 November 2015 and not 1 April 2015.

Accordingly, taxpayers should be cognisant of potential tax implications for those transactions where allowance assets or trading stock which met the 50% threshold were sold in exchange for shares and those shares have subsequently been disposed of by means of a share buy-back concluded on or after 1 April 2015 and within 18 months of the original transaction.

CONCLUSION

Given the retrospective effect of the change and depending on the tax year end, the shareholder subject to the share buy-back may be required to reopen its tax return and account for the income tax on the buy-back amount. Alternatively, the additional tax could be paid using the voluntary disclosure programme provisions in the Tax Administration Act.

Of course, the better outcome is for the section and its effective date to be changed in the 2016 Taxation Laws Amendment Bill so as to align itself with the original intention.

Legal notice: Nothing in this publication should be construed as legal advice from any lawyer or this firm. Readers are advised to consult professional legal advisors for guidance on legislation which may affect their businesses.

© 2016 Werksmans Incorporated trading as Werksmans Attorneys. All rights reserved.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

RYAN KILLORAN

Title: Director
Office: Johannesburg
Direct line: +27 (0)11 535 8258
Email: rkilloran@werksmans.com

Ryan Killoran has been a director at Werksmans, working in the firm's Commercial Practice since 2015.

Ryan specialises in taxation of domestic and cross-border financial instruments and investment products, private equity fund formation and tax structuring for international investment funds, private equity deal structuring, mergers, acquisitions and reorganisations of corporate entities, share scheme formation and tax advice, and international tax planning for corporates including: controlled foreign companies, double tax agreements, financial services taxation, offshore acquisition financing structuring, foreign trusts, transfer pricing and thin capitalisation, taxation of local and offshore trusts, tax litigation, alternative dispute resolution and settlements.

Ryan received the Best Student Award in the Higher Diploma in International Tax. He was the guest lecturer for the MCom Taxation and PG Dip International Tax courses at the University of Johannesburg and a guest lecturer on the South African aspects of various IBFD training courses.

He holds a B Com LLB degree from the University of Johannesburg and a higher Diploma in Tax Law (Wits) and in International Taxation (University of Johannesburg).

Ryan is also a contributing guest author of the following textbooks:

- > Olivier, L. & Honiball, M. 2009, The Taxation of Trusts in South Africa. Cape Town: Siber Ink.
- > Olivier, L. & Honiball, M. 2011, International Tax: A South African Perspective. Fifth Edition. Cape Town: Siber Ink.

> Keep us close

The Corporate & Commercial Law Firm
www.werksmans.com
A member of the LEX Africa Alliance

ABOUT WERKSMANS ATTORNEYS

Established in the early 1900s, Werksmans Attorneys is a leading South African corporate and commercial law firm, serving multinationals, listed companies, financial institutions, entrepreneurs and government.

Operating in Gauteng and the Western Cape, the firm is connected to an extensive African legal alliance through LEX Africa.

LEX Africa was established in 1993 as the first and largest African legal alliance and offers huge potential for Werksmans' clients seeking to do business on the continent by providing a gateway to Africa.

With a formidable track record in mergers and acquisitions, banking and finance, and commercial litigation and dispute resolution, Werksmans is distinguished by the people, clients and work that it attracts and retains.

Werksmans' more than 200 lawyers are a powerful team of independent-minded individuals who share a common service ethos. The firm's success is built on a solid foundation of insightful and innovative deal structuring and legal advice, a keen ability to understand business and economic imperatives and a strong focus on achieving the best legal outcome for clients.

